Carrs are an old established firm from Carlisle and they provide one of the most practical bread making machine options in the UK. They also produce three varieties of flour that are milled especially for use in their bread makers. They also have support for users of the bread makers.

Whilst most milled flours can be used in bread makers, the milling of specialist flours is consistent with the recipes provided and if other flours are used, the exact recipes may need to be slightly modified. Carrs flour is also perfectly suited to baking by hand in the old fashioned way.

I have occasionally used Carrs flour for bread making and I have found it to be perfectly suitable for any type of bread making. The range of products is limited to Strong white, Brown and Wholemeal flours, but these flours are all that are needed for basic bread making.
