This is a restored Corn Mill which relies on volunteers to run the milling process. It produces small amounts of flour for local sales and in open for a short period at the start of each month. Check their website for opening times.

Wicken mill was built in 1813 to grind wheat flour for the local villages around Wicken Fen. It fell into disrepair after closing in the 1930's. A restoration project was started by local volunteers in 1987 and new sails were fitted in 1996. Since then, a small amount of grain has been processed. The mill produces stoneground flour and two grades of white flour. It is associated to The Traditional Corn Millers Guild (TCMG)

I have not used flour from this mill, but it is reputed to be of the highest quality.
